These are the episodes that I just didn't care much for.
Comedy just wasn't the main forte in The Twilight Zone...

"Sounds and Silences"

(Season 5, Episode 27)

https://www.imdb.com/title/tt0734620/?ref_=ttep_ep_27

Retired Navy man and current model ship manufacturing company owner Roswell Flemington enjoys loud noises, is an annoyance to others, drives his wife to leave him, and is suitably punished with a full dose of irony.

"The Bard"

https://www.imdb.com/title/tt0734630/?ref_=ttep_ep_18

Julius Moomer, a talentless, but relentless, self-promoting hack who dreams of becoming a successful television writer, uses a book of magic to summon William Shakespeare to write dramatic teleplays that Moomer will pass off as his own. Shakespeare becomes irritated by Moomer's lack of appreciation and is even more appalled when he discovers the changes wrought on his plays by cynical television executives.

"I Dream of Genie"

https://www.imdb.com/title/tt0734574/?ref=ttcp_ep_12

A wisecracking genie appears from a lamp to a meek man, George P. Hanley. Hanley is so used to bad luck, he imagines how each of three possible wishes could go very wrong - but the genie will grant him only one wish!

"The Mighty Casey"

https://www.imdb.com/title/tt0734661/?ref=ttcp_ep_35

A down-and-out baseball team's fortunes are lifted by a mysterious but seemingly unbeatable young player.

"Showdown with Rance McGrew"

(Season 3, Episode 20)

https://www.imdb.com/title/tt0734619/?ref=tttep_ep_20

Overbearing Western TV series star Rance McGrew is transported back in time to the real Wild West and comes face-to-face with the real Jesse James, who is not happy about how he and his fellow outlaws are being portrayed on Rance's show.
